

Continuous attributes

Handled by averaging the number of unique attributes used in discrete attributes

This average was used to divide continuous data into the average number of subsets

The range was calculated to help determine the range and then divided into avg number of value number.

Continuous data was sorted based on these ranges calculated.

Missing data was replaced with the most commonly occurring value in the overall training dataset.

Accuracy per fold:

0.81